VOLUNTEER OPPORTUNITIES

We have a number of volunteer opportunities for Oceanids. Please see if any of the following interest you!

We would love to involve more members in Oceanids activities. Please email Kim Signoret-Paar kspaar@ucsd.edu and she will answer any questions about the “job” and connect you to the right person.

VOLUNTEERS WANTED FOR UCSD RESERVES

Did you know that UCSD has four reserves in four local natural environments, where undergraduate and graduate research is conducted? In addition to the research, public uses include K-12 and continuing education classes, extracurricular activities for all levels of students, public agency visits, group tours, etc.

As an official support organization for UCSD, Oceanids is seeking to enlarge our footprint beyond our traditional roles of student financial support, support for newcomers, and sharing our diverse hobbies & interests.

We would like to support UCSD with our time & expertise and there are many ways to do this. One such opportunity has presented itself in the form of volunteering at UCSD’s several reserves.

These reserves are very important sites protecting our unique local habitats. Oceanids birding group were lucky enough to visit one such site - the Kendall Frost Marsh Mission Bay Reserve recently. In the effort to make such sites more accessible there is an urgent need for volunteers to help guide interested members of the public.

Would you like to volunteer at The Kendall Frost Marsh Reserve or Scripps Coastal Reserve? You can learn about these & other UCSD Reserves by going to nrs.ucsd.edu

Kendall Frost Marsh

By Oceanid Jan Ouren

Galveston is in the middle of a huge flyway from Canada to Mexico called the Central Flyway. It’s similar to the Pacific Flyway that crosses California but about four times larger in acres (58 million acres versus 12.6 million acres). Two other flyways cross the United States, the Mississippi Flyway (3.5 million acres) and the Atlantic Flyway (43.8 million acres). What counts are the priority bird species that fly these routes. The Central Flyway has 24 priority species, including the Sandhill Crane. Known best for their gathering in the wetlands of the Platte River, Nebraska, they also stop in Galveston, Texas, on their way to Mexico. (Audabon.com)

On my annual Christmas visit to my sister in Texas, birding in the marshes of Galveston is one of our usual activities. We did see a couple of shy Sandhill Cranes with a young one in a field, but too far to photograph. Our next stop however was the mudflats nearby. Here I saw my very first killdeer whose photo appears above. The killdeer is a kind of plover, also found in these same mudflats. Apparently common and noisy with its loud call, the killdeer is medium-migratory bird, living year round in the southern U.S. So perhaps, if you are birding in the San Diego area, you too may see a killdeer, marked by its two black breast bands.
HIKING FOR THE SENIOR CROWD
Ah, hiking on December 14 to the Santa Ysabel Reserve West. We had been there before and I remembered the beautiful meadows with the curious cows. No cows in December, but it was still very beautiful. The three young ladies in my car from Germany and Brazil chatted amiably. We met the other hikers under the guidance of our leader Jim Bunch at Dudley’s bakery in Santa Ysabel to get some baked goodies, then back to the starting point of the hike. All went well, my dog Lissa was eagerly checking out each squirrel hole. There was a steep descent into a valley where a peaceful creek was flowing. I followed the young people with Lissa on leash who were jumping from one stone to the next fording the creek. I had taken off my boots at an earlier visit, but now, in winter? Surely, I could,.... Well, I slipped and fell and found myself in the creek on my back like a beetle turned over by a mischievous hand. The water flowed, Lissa pulled and I was helped up, soaking wet up to my chest. Most of the hike was behind us but I decided to turn back. No point in getting icy cold. So Lissa and I turned around, hiked the few miles back to the car where I turned on the heat full blast. What now? Of course, I had to wait for my passengers. After sharing my lunch with Lissa I drove 7 miles to the town of Julian where the weekend tourists were taking in the shop windows. Still dripping wet I found myself in one of the more likely clothing establishments where a friendly clerk helped me to a complete make-over. It felt great to get out of the wet clothes. On heavy socks, no shoes, I made my way back to the illegally parked car and back to the start of the hike. The wait was not too long. My passengers arrived, slightly shaken by news of another mishap which had happened to the only other senior in the group. But that is another story. Roswitha Enright

San Diego Independent Scholars: a friend of Oceanids.

Recently, the Boards of Oceanids and of the San Diego Independent Scholars (SDIS) each approved a cooperative relationship between the two organizations, in which we agreed to publicize each other’s events.

SDIS, a nonprofit organization established in the early 1980’s, was founded by a group of highly educated women who could not find employment to support their scholarly interests. Later, SDIS became the founding chapter of the National Coalition of Independent Scholars, which administers a peer-reviewed interdisciplinary journal and holds periodic national conventions. Early on, SDIS established loose links with UCSD, including the availability of UCSD library cards to SDIS members and the holding of monthly SDIS general meetings on the UCSD campus.

The mission of SDIS is to encourage learning and scholarship within both its membership and the San Diego community. This goal is expressed in our monthly public lectures and in SDIS Study Groups, which combine comraderie with reading and lively discussions. In addition, small grants are awarded on a competitive basis to SDIS members who wish to pursue scholarly research. Books published while an author is a SDIS member are placed in local libraries. SDIS also hosts a table at the Union-Tribune’s annual Festival of Books, where readers and potential authors can talk with published book authors and other active writers from SDIS.

As Oceanids and SDIS are getting to know each other, we invite interested Oceanids to visit SDIS events as our guests. An insert below describes upcoming SDIS public lectures, which meet at 1:30 on the third Saturday of each month during the academic year, in room 111A of the Chancellor’s complex of UCSD. You are also welcome to explore the various SDIS Study Groups, summarized at www.sdscholars.org.

Hello Oceanids! We look forward to your input and friendship.

“Ice Age Discoveries Deep Beneath the Yucatan: Hoyo Negro Project”

Please join us at the next CARTA (Center for Academic Research and Training in Anthropogeny) Public Symposium, “Exploring the Origins of Today’s Humans,” to be held on Friday, February 21, 2020, from 1:00-5:30 pm (PST) at the Salk Institute (Conrad T. Prebys Auditorium).

SUMMARY
Where did we humans come from? When did we become the dominant species on the planet? Available evidence indicates that all humans living today are derived from a relatively small population that arose in Africa beginning >200,000 years ago, spreading throughout Africa and eventually the rest of the planet. In the course of this diaspora, we mated with other human-like species and assimilated some of their DNA, but eventually replaced all of these other close evolutionary cousins, without exception – leaving only one human species today. A flood of new information from Ancient DNA, Fossils, Archeology and Population Studies calls us to revisit the matter.

REGISTRATION
Admission is FREE and open to the public; however, registration is required. To register, go to: https://carta.anthropogeny.org/events/exploring-origins-todays-humans

Edward Watts, Ph.D. Chair, Department of History UCSD, Alkiviadis Vassiliadis Endowed Chair and Professor of History
“Lessons from the End of Representative Democracy in Rome”
When most people think of Rome, they think of the Roman Empire, a political entity that lasted for nearly 1500 years. But Rome had been a Republic, a representative democracy, for 500 years before the first emperor took power. The Roman Republic was one of the world’s most successful representative governments. Rome’s political system allowed it to win long and grueling wars with Carthage and assume control of territory across three continents, but this territorial expansion also destabilized the Republic, brought political violence back to Roman life, and gave ambitious individual politicians the ability to prey upon popular discontent in ways that advanced their own careers while harming the Republic.

Professor Watts received his PhD in History from Yale University in 2002. His research interests center on the intellectual and religious history of the Roman Empire and the early Byzantine Empire. His first book, City and School in Late Antique Athens and Alexandria, explains how the increasingly Christian upper class of the late antique world used a combination of economic and political pressures to neutralize pagan elements of the traditional educational system. His latest book is titled “Mortal Republic: How Rome Fell into Tyranny” (Basic Books, 2018). He is also co-authoring a volume introducing the historical and classroom uses of Roman imperial coins.
